undiscoverable uncertainty of the future of both the currency question and the questions of protection and revenue. It would be seen that he did not regard the the government and was supreme. That party is responsible for whatever does or does not occur in the future. The time would come when the Democratic mem-bers of congress, instead of disputing with bers of congress, instead of disputing with each other as to what the Democratic platform meant, would be disputing with each other as to what the necessities of the country demand. Until that time came the Republican party could be relied upon to assist them in the direction of sound government. He was sorry that the Republicans had not been permitted to exhibit their wisdom in the way of amendments. The Republicans were confined to those propositions which the whole Democratic party had finally determined to submit to the Republicans.
He would not contrast this action of the Democratic party with their claims during the Fifty-first congress. He would not attempt to show how the rights of the minority are outraged, according to them;
for he recognized the necessity and duty of the party in power assuming the responsibility of its actions. He was sorry the question could not be settled within the bounds of the Democratic party, because a repeal could the nation expect to attract foreign capital.

Mr. Reed paid a handsome compliment to the banks, which he declared were the mainstay of the country at this time.

In conclusion, Mr. Reed said: "What then is the pathway of duty! Uncouditional repeal. That will give relief or not if not, then we must try something else, and the sooner the better. It is a matter of deep regret to all sensible men that we have delayed so long. Men are today struggling almost against fate and praying for relief. The banks are strained almost to the point of breaking. It is a pity that we had to waste so much time in this weary winter of talk. We stand in a very peculiar position, we Republicans of today. The representative of the United States, finds himself powerless in his first great recommendation to his own party, were he left to their tenter mercies, the country would witness the spectace of the president of its choice overthrown by the party charged with this country's government.

party charged with this country's government.

"What wonder then, that he appeals to the patriotism of another party—a party whose patriotism has never been appealed to in vain. The proudest boast of the proud Republican party has been its devotion to the cause of sound finance. When this country was pledged to pay its debts in depreciated money, the Republican party responded with loud acclaim to that noble sentiment of General Hawley, that 'every bond was as sacred as a soldier's grave. It cost us hard fighting and a sore struggle, but the credit of this country has no superior in the world. When the same arguments heard today were heard fifteen years ago sounding the praises of inflated currency and proclaiming the glories of hat money, the party of Abraham Lincoln marched steadily toward specie payment and prosperity. What we were in our days of victory, we are in our days of defeat—the champions of true and solid finance—and when the day comes, as it surely will come, for us to lead this land back to the paths of prosperity and fame which were trodden under Republican rule for so many years, we shall take back with us our ancient glory, undimmed by rule for so many years, we shall take back with us our ancient glory, undimmed by adversity—our ancient honor, unsulfied by defeat."

Mr. Reed's speech was listened to with close attention and was frequently ap-plauded. At the closing sentence, in which Mr. Reed declared that when the day came, as it soon would come, that the day came, as it soon would come, that the Republican party would lead the land back to the paths of prosperity and fame, it would "take back with it its glory undimmed by adversity and its honor unsuified by defeat," loud and long-continued applause burst out from the Republican side of the chamber and from the galleries, and even the Democrats—an unwonted spectacle—contributed their share of applause.

Mr. Allen of Mississippi also answered

Mr. Bland replied to Mr. Cockran. Mr. Bland made one of the strongest arguments of the debate in favor of absolute free coinage. He concluded by saying that to strike down silver would mean a political revolution that would destroy both the old parties. For one, he was willing to join the peop. even though the Democraty would have to go to the wall. [Applause.]

Mr. McMillin spoke next. He was in favor of keeping three kinds of pear of the Sherman law, because it was an infamy and an outrage.

Mr. Boutelle of Maine said that be was willing to lead his aid to repeal, but insisted that the financial question had always been a partisan one, and that the Democratic party had been on the wrong side. He answered the speech made by Mr. Bryan early this week.

Mr. Fellows of New York spoke earnestly for repeal. His remarks were applicated and cheered.

which completely blockaded travel. The driver on a United States mail wagon was anxious to reach a train, but could not get through the crowd. Inspector Ross, with a couple of policemen, cleared a passage for the wagon. The buggy of J. H. Martindale stood at the curb, and the crowd told Martindale to get out, to which he replied. "I only wish I could." The crowd seized the buggy and turned it over. Inspector Ross ordered the men to move it back. Hornaieviez picked up a paving stone and hurled it at Ross, striking him on the head and felling him like a log. Then the fight began.
